Making a written or oral submission to a formal parliamentary or government inquiry is one of the best ways to contribute to and influence policy making on issues of importance.

Making a submission can raise your organisation's profile within government, your sector and across the community. It can also help your organisation to establish or strengthen its relationships with a range of policy makers within and external to government.

Neville Mackieson Consulting's interactive workshop is for policy and advocacy professionals who are driven to influence government policy and budget decisions.

Participants in the workshop will gain:

- general information about inquiry processes
- specific guidelines and tips for submissions – to clarify the potential purpose(s), to structure the document/presentation, and to measure success
- presentation and discussion of actual examples
- ideas for specific ways in which your organisation can use a particular submission to maximise its influence
- a copy of course materials
- access to tailored follow-up to assist your organisation to maximise its advocacy
- a networking drinks opportunity immediately after the in-person workshops (only)
